

The Meaning of Life Gazette

We Don't Make This Stuff Up – Usually!

The Newspaper of Life, Politics, Americana, Humor and Potpourri

All The News That Fits, We Print!

VOL. I . . No. 1

October 2019

0¢

TRUMP TO BE IMPEACHED!

It's A Done Deal!

By NILES FETTUCINE

Washington Bureau Chief

WASHINGTON, DC, 2019 into 2020 –House Democrats have decided to impeach the President! Eschewing decency, fairness, honor, and the American Way, they have decided to proceed furtively, by not holding a formal vote on the matter (after all, a Democrat controlled House can't be expected to act democratically); and by not allowing any Republican representatives to call their own witnesses, question Democrat called witnesses or issue any subpoenas.

Speaker Pelosi has said that, since impeachment is solely the constitutional duty of the House (a co-equal branch of the government), allowing the President any constitutionally protected civil rights would only get in the way. In a further break from tradition, Pelosi disclosed that all administration witnesses will be denied the right to be seated or wear clothing during their testimony. The late Ted Kennedy's office issued the following statement, "We sure hope Melania testifies".

To further insure impeachment, Pelosi said that after the damning evidence is in, no vote will be called or taken. The Speaker, alone but in consultation with Adam (slim head) Schiff and Jerry (Go) Nadler, would decide the outcome of the investigation.

When asked what the President's chances of avoiding impeachment were, Pelosi's response was garbled, but contained the words "snowflake" and "hell".

GAZETTE PREDICTION!

Hillary To Run Against Trump on 2020

By CHUCK WAGON

Special to the Gazette

HAWLEYVILLE, CT, October 2019 – No one has seemed to notice that this year, Democrat primaries are proportional. That means that each candidate will win only the same percentage of each state's delegates as they win of that state's popular vote. Thus, if there are three or four viable candidates in the primaries (I define a viable candidate as one who will receive at least 15-20% of the primary vote [and delegates]), no one candidate will have enough delegates at the convention to win the nomination on the first ballot.

When no candidate wins on the first ballot, two strange things happen: (a) The delegates are no longer "pledged" and don't have to vote for the candidate on whose ticket they were elected; and, (b) The "super delegates" can now vote.

After the first ballot, super delegates will make up about 18% of all voting delegates and the super delegates are Hillary's friends.

If there was no nomination after the first vote, the convention would be a mess. There would be three or four candidates, each hanging out there with 15-20% of the first ballot vote and nowhere to go. The convention would be splintered and no one (well, almost no one) would know what to do.

It would be up to Hillary to step into the breach, once more. In one fell swoop, she would save the party and get another shot at the presidency. And she knows it! I'm sure (like me) she has done the math and knows she could easily win 25% of the non-super delegates right off the bat. If she can hold on to most of the super delegates (another 15% of the vote) she would only need another 10% of the remaining delegates to put her over the top! Surely there is one other candidate (who holds at least 10% of the delegates) who wants to become Vice-President.

Hillary would become the Democrat candidate on the second ballot, and save the Democrat party. (And she didn't have to spend any money or any time in those pesky primaries).

Hillary than can then say she saved the Democrat party and has already beaten Trump once! Things couldn't get any better (or worse)!

The primaries are front loaded in 2020, so Hillary and the Democrats will have a lot of time between the last primary and the convention to consider the situation.

Editor's Note: Hillary could enter some of the final primaries to pick up a few delegates to increase her chance of nomination and to prepare the electorate for her second coming. Of course, this would cost her campaign a lot of money and would expose her to a lot of deplorables.

Famous Last Words – This wall-paper is killing me; one of us has to go! – Oscar Wilde, November 30, 1900.

Joke of the Day – President Trump will be banning the sale of pre-shredded cheeses because he wants to make America grate again!
